Poetic Moment

Poet, Luci Shawpiration lives in Bellingham, Washington and in 2006 published a collection of poems titled, Accompanied by Angels – Poems of the Incarnation. This one is titled,

Step on it:

*All these broken bridges – we have always tried to build them to each other and to heaven. Why is it such a sad surprise when last year's iron-strong, out-thrust organization, this month's shining project, today's silver network of good resolutions all answer the future's questions with rust, and the sharp, ugly jutting of the unfinished?
We have miscalculated every time.
Our blueprints are smudged.
We never order enough steel.
Our foundations are shallow as mud.
Our cables fray. Our superstructure is stuck together clumsily with rivets the wrong size.
for all time, linking
the unlinkable*

*We are our own botched bridges.
We were schooled in Babel, and our ambitious soaring sinks in the sea. How could we ever
hope to carry your heavy glory?
We cannot even bear the weight of our own failure.*

*But you did the unthinkable.
You built one Bridge to us, solid enough, long enough, strong enough to stand all tides
for all time, linking*
